We are looking for a Game Designer to work on a yet unannounced project developed at Ubisoft Mainz. For this new project, not related to the ANNO brand, you'll be the creative energy behind our concrete designs.

You translate the project's vision into actual gameplay and enable our players to experience our game's narrative and its world. You will be part of a carefully selected and highly motivated team of developers. From conception to implementation and polishing, you take part in creating, iterating, and fine-tuning designs that are engaging and fun. You work on both, the tiny details that make for high quality and the consistency of the bigger picture where all pieces fall into place.

- Create intuitive, consistent, and elegant game systems
- Drive the development of your features towards the game's vision
- Support your Lead and Creative Direction
- Organize and improve feature creation workflows
- Adjust game systems to achieve a well-balanced gameplay experience
- Maintain a slim but clean design documentation due to inhouse standards
- Ensure effective and clear communication with the dev team working on your features

What you bring:

- Minimum 2 years of experience within the game design or other relevant experience
- Basic knowledge of all game design disciplines like e.g., narrative and system design
- Excellent communication, documentation, and organizational skills
- Good understanding of content creation processes and development workflows
- Good knowledge of game production pipelines and familiarity with scheduling tools
- Ability to learn and master new tools and techniques
- Strong verbal and written English skills
- A broad area of interest exceeding games

- Team player with a positive mindset
 - A strong motivation to create high quality content
- * Basic knowledge of scripting/coding is a plus
- * Knowledge and interest in psychology, philosophy, and history is a plus
- * German skills are a plus
